RE: Official Statement Regarding Flocking in KOVAL Craft Spirits

To whom it may concern:

The occurrence of flocking in our craft spirits is possible but the flakes are neither harmful nor dangerous. Their occurrence is less probable in our Bourbon and Four Grain due to their higher alcohol content, but they can be affected as well. Our Rye and Millet are more likely to be affected due to their lesser alcohol content, and the occurrence of flocking can be visible in our Gins due to clumping of existing essential oils as well. The flakes will dissolve after shaking the bottle or will subside after a certain amount of time. Nevertheless, our products are flawless and can be consumed without any harmful consequences. The flakes are, as a matter of fact, the result of our approach of non-chill filtering our products. We're consciously using that approach in order to preserve the entire flavor and character of our products.

Sincerely,
